Mosman Residence

Great care and time was taken in the planning and execution of the Mosman Project to ensure that the finished environment was complimentary to the circa 1880's residence. Many obstacles were overcome, the most significant being the difficult accessibility of the site and the considerable quantities of sandstone that had to be removed. The water feature at house level flows down a series of steps into the swimming pool, which is elegantly surrounded by feature planting of lavender and shaved box-hedge. The highest quality stonework is complimented by precise edging that provides boundaries for the gardens. A variety of plants were selected and utilised and whilst immature the selections are appropriate for future growth. The timeless design compliments the natural feel of the property.
